Libardo Rodrãguez.Q: Why would one want a competition to focus on self-improvement vs. payoffs? Is this a contradiction? (For example, imagine that the government has just decided to subsidize a scale of those competing to gain leadership in the arts or chess. This results in people with weaker talents being obligated to pay back the government for the money it took to aid their competition.) A: That happens a lot in business and beyond. One needs to be very careful that those funds aren't misused. But otherwise, it could be a good way to go. Imagine that you have a company, and one of the reasons you should be working hard is because you have to answer to the competition. The way I see it: the audience of the competition has low IQ and quite limited opportunities to find out how much
