Radiotherapy is usually used for the treatment of head and neck cancer. It produces the entire mucosal surface of the oral cavity, pharynx and larynx. Common complications of radiotherapy are mucositis and pharyngocutaneous fistula (PCF). The aim of this study was to investigate the spontaneous healing of these fistulas and to evaluate the importance of the pharyngeal mucosa in the repair process. Eighty patients with PCFs in the head and neck area were included in this study. Patients were treated with surgery, and the characteristics of the wounds and the repair processes were evaluated. Fifty-seven percent of the patients were female; 47% were male; and the median age was 58 years. All patients had previously received radiotherapy. Of the total number of cases, 84% of fistulas closed spontaneously. Reepithelization of the pharyngeal mucosa was observed in 70% of the cases in which spontaneous closure was unsuccessful. Clinical characteristics were observed as gender ($p = 0.046$) and fistula localization ($p = 0.001$). The effectiveness of the repair in the larynx was significantly higher than that in the oropharynx and hypoph
